ABOUT THEME

Oral health an inherent part of general health has always been looked as more of curative service than Preventive. Estimates from Global Burden of Disease demonstrate that oral diseases affect 3.9 billion people & untreated dental caries is the most prevalent morbid condition among all diseases. The management of oral diseases significantly associated with catastrophic effect on the public health budgets in any economy. When planning and evaluating oral health programs and services globally, the national and local goals needs to be emphasized which can guide oral health policies at all levels. Greater emphasis is needed on developing global policies in oral health promotion, prevention, integrated more effectively with other priority programs of prevention of Non-Communicable disease which will be role models. The XXVIII IAPHD National Conference extends a collaborative international approach to expand the horizon and future of Public Health Dentistry unleashing the uncultivated realm of Public health worldwide.
